

CONTENTS

Acknowledgements	vii
1 Naming the Mind	1
Alternative psychologies	1
The categories of Psychology	5
Historiography	9
Overview of the book	14
Notes	20
2 The Ancients	21
Persons as objects to themselves	23
Reason	27
Aristotelian affections	30
Some post-Aristotelian themes	32
Notes	35
3 The Great Transformation	36
Eighteenth-century novelties	36
From passion to emotion	39
Instrumental reason	42
Motives and the contingency of action	44
A new sense of self	46
Notes	49
4 The Physiological Background	51
Psychology and physiology	51
Vitalistic roots of 'stimulation'	54
Ramifications of the reflex concept	58
The metaphor of mental energy	62
Notes	64
5 Putting Intelligence on the Map	66
Biological roots	66
What modern intelligence was not	71
The universal classroom	74
Psychometric intelligence	79
Notes	83

6	Behaviour and Learning	85
	Five layers of 'behaviour'	87
	Mind as inference	89
	A naturalistic social science	94
	Isms and ambiguities	96
	The practical exemplar	98
	Behaviour and control	100
	The abstraction of 'learning'	102
	Notes	108
7	Motivation and Personality	110
	The interest in motivation	111
	Emergence of the concept of drive	116
	Motivational psychology as normative	121
	The category of personality: historical	124
	Personality psychology and cultural conservatism	128
	Notes	132
8	Attitudes	134
	An unpromising beginning	134
	How attitudes became 'social'	140
	The smell of success: attitudes are measured	146
	A multiplicity of attitudes vs. an ideology?	152
	Notes	156
9	Metalanguage: The Technological Framework	158
	The significance of stimulus-response psychology	159
	Psychologists encounter 'variables'	163
	Variables enter theoretical discourse	165
	Variables in research practice	168
	Variables as lingua franca	173
	Theoretical reflections	176
	Notes	179
10	The Nature of Psychological Kinds	181
	Historical roots of psychological categories	181
	The politics of psychological language	184
	The reference of psychological categories	186
	Natural kinds or human kinds?	189
	Notes	193
	References	195
	Index	212

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book includes three paragraphs from my chapter, 'The practice of psychological discourse', in K.J. Gergen and C.F. Graumann (eds), Historical Dimensions of Psychological Discourse, Cambridge University Press, 1996; and five paragraphs from my chapter, 'The historical formation of selves', in R.D. Ashmore and L. Jussim (eds), Self and Identity: Fundamental Issues, Oxford University Press, 1997. These sources are gratefully acknowledged.